

YOUNG BURGLARS STOLE $25,000 AS NEIGHBORS' PETS

Booty of Boy Gang Brings Crowd of Robbed Harlemites to Headquarters.

THEIR FLAT A MINEL

Two of Five Stripped to Restore Clothes Taken From One of Eighteen Victims.

Inspector Russell's ante-room at Police Headquarters looked like a department store to-day when the booty which was seized in an apartment at No. 223 West One Hundred and Ninth street, occupied by five young men, one of them a mulatto, who were arrested last night at the daylight robbery who have terrorized Harlem for three months, was laid out for identification.

Jewelry, silverware, cut glass, millinery and feminine attire almost bent the big table in two and overflowed on desks and chairs. Men's clothes, hats, shoes and walking-sticks and meerschaum pipes and tobacco jars filled other tables and chairs. As the day progressed and Harlemites, mostly feminine, arrived singly and in groups to look at the stuff, a passerby might have mistaken Police Headquarters for a scene of a bargain sale.

Boy Gang Had Chief and Valet.

The quintette is led by Robert Hayward, tall, slender and boyish looking, with fresh, rosy cheeks, who, on Jan. 8, 1909, while still less than sixteen years old, was arrested for robbery and sent to the Catholic reformatory for fifteen months. The mulatto, Ferris Horden, acted as chief and valet to the others, and the police say that, while he took no part in the eighteen robberies which the others have confessed, he made himself additionally useful to his employers by taking stolen goods to pawnshops.

The others, none more than a year or two older than their leader, are Joseph Vogel, alias "Patch," Ray Barretto, and Joseph Brady.

Horden and Vogel were compelled today to strip almost to the skin, divest themselves of the gorgeous "glad rags" in which they were garbed when arrested and turn the clothes over to Charles Besser of No. 13 West One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street, one of their victims. Later they were handcuffed to detectives and taken to Harlem Court, with their teeth chattering.

According to the police, the gang members admit that they have gathered loot valued at more than $25,000. Their method was to hire a flat in some choice locality, install Horden as chef and valet and ingratiate themselves with their neighbors. They ate good sustenance and money and were lavishly in their entertainment. Young Hayward laughed as he said: "I guess some of the girls where we used to live and make dippy over us, but we had no time for skirts."

Pawnbroker Gave Tip.

The raid on the apartment yesterday afternoon, where the five prisoners lived in elegant style, was brought about by a pawnbroker in Brooklyn, who told Detectives O'Connor, Cunningham and Denny of the Brooklyn Central Office that three men had brought stuff to him last week which was noted on the "suspicious list" sent to pawnshops by the police. The three detectives raided Horden, Barretto and Vogel as they were entering the pawnshop carrying three suitcases filled with dresses, jewelry and bric-a-brac worth about $1,700.

When Horden was searched, the detectives found a card with the address of the One Hundred and Ninth street flat in his pocket and they notified headquarters. Detectives Collings, Thompson, Brenick and Hawkins went to the flat on the second floor. They were invited to come in when they knocked and they found Hayward and Brady lying, clad in smoking jackets and slippers and smoking cigarettes.

"Well, the 'japs' up," said Hayward when they were arrested. "We twisted our last house to-day and we intended to hike for Florida and recuperate."

When the two men were arraigned at headquarters, the proceedings were interrupted over the telephone by Mrs. Harris, of No. 223 West One Hundred and Eleventh street, who called up to say that her flat had been entered during the afternoon, and a diamond ring, a watch, a bracelet and a fur coat were taken. Today she identified her property in the pile of booty.

HUNTED FIRE HALF HOUR.

Police of the Leonard street station and a number of citizens were more than half an hour discovering the origin of a dense cloud of smoke that hung over the vicinity of the station house at 3 o'clock this morning, and then only were led to the fire when there came an explosion and a roar from the fourth floor of the five-story factory building at No. 49 Franklin street.

The fire started in the quarters of Lowenberg & Heiblen, manufacturers of raincoats, and went through the roof. The high pressure system was put to work and the blaze was extinguished after a loss of $5,000.

BELATED!

So Thirty-five Solid Mahogany Extension
Tables Will Be $25, $27.50, $30 and $35

These, of the plain, beautiful Colonial type, of which our ancestors boasted, are supported by massive Colonial pedestal and broad scroll feet. Improvements on those our forefathers knew, however, for the tables are built so that the pedestal does not separate when the top is extended to six feet, though this separation is necessary when an eight foot extension is made.

These tables were ordered for our Half-Yearly Sale. Late in arrival though they are, yet it would not be fair to sell them at their regular prices of $35, $38, $40 and $45, as they were bought at a price-concession from the manufacturers.

Therefore, 45-inch tables are $25 and $27.50, and 48-inch tables are $30 and $35. Each size extends to either 6 or 8 feet. Please remember there are only thirty-five. Sixth Gallery, New Building.

A Second Shipment Adds to Our Collection of Inexpensive Lamps of the Best Materials
Selling at About Half Their Real Value

This sale of lamps is a semi-annual endeavor with us—which accounts for the unusually low prices on these lamps of the finest construction and workmanship, and which ordinarily sell at double these prices in any first-class specialty shop.

This particular group represents the surplus of stock a prominent manufacturer and many are advance samples of next Fall's styles.

In the collection there are desk lamps and table lamps both for electricity and for gas, with brass standards inset with copper, or of all-brass with copper finish. The shades come in the popular dull green and pale browns and are made of the new bent art, glass suitable for country homes.

A gas portable lamp (as pictured) selling at $7.50, instead of $15, fairly represents the many price-advantages—it has pierced brass trimmings underlined with copper—the shade is made of two metals, brass and copper, and is colored with the new bent art glass.

Also an electric lamp (as pictured), priced at $7.50, instead of $15, is only one of hundreds of others selling for similar savings in price. This is composed of pierced brass underlined with copper. The shade has new cathedral glass panels.

Gas lamps are priced as low as $3, $4, $5 and $7.50.
Electric portable lamps start at $3.25, and at the intermediate prices of $4, $5, $7.50, $10, $12.50, go up to $37.50. Second Gallery, New Building.
